Interactive comment on “Climate engineering and the ocean: effects on biogeochemistry and primary production” by Siv K. Lauvset et al.

R. SEITZ
SEITZ@POST.HARVARD.EDU

Received and published: 16 June 2017

In reaching their abstract’s conclusion, have the authors considered and compared to SRM models circumglobal natural albedo variations like those seen in the calcite belt or created by the extensive summer ploctonic blooms that annually cover a significant percentage of Northern seas? The radiative forcings resulting from them may rival or exceed humanity’s continental albedo footprint.

Fig. 1.